Get Out of the House launches Australia-wide: over 125,000 things to do, free to use and free to list

For immediate release, Wednesday, 11th November 2026

A new Australian website, Get Out of the House, has gone live in every state and territory, listing over 125,000 places to visit across 15,353 suburbs and towns.

The site answers one simple question: what is there to do around here? People search by suburb, town, landmark or postcode, or tap Near me now, and can narrow it down by mood, from family fun and rainy-day ideas to nature walks, grown-up outings and spots for grey nomads.

Beyond the directory, Get Out of the House includes a day planner that puts places in order around opening hours, travel time and the weather, and a road trip planner that shows food, fuel, toilets and things to do along the way. Search and listings are available in 14 languages.

Local businesses can list free, and councils and schools can post notices and community events at no cost. Council road closures and works appear in the same colours as the Australian Warning System, on searches, maps and road trips that pass through.

Verified local newspapers, radio and TV stations can also post headlines that link straight to the full story on their own websites.

"We built Get Out of the House because the question every family, retiree and traveller asks is the same: what is there to do around here? Now there's one place to find out, from the big attractions to the little things only locals know about, and it's free to use and free to list." said Colin Christian, founder of Get Out of the House.

The site is free to use. An optional GOOTH Plus membership, at $4.99 a month or $39 a year with a 14-day free trial, adds unlimited day plans, the road trip audio guide and more.

Get Out of the House is Australian made and owned, with its data stored in the Australia and New Zealand region.
